Careers in nonprofit news media

Go where journalism jobs are growing.

Nonprofit newsrooms employ thousands of journalists, news tech and social enterprise leaders, and they are growing fast. The number of nonprofit newsrooms grew tenfold in 10 years, and growth is accelerating.

The nonprofit news sector is building a new kind of sustainable business model for news. Journalism is facing a once-in-a-lifetime challenge to its business model, and up-and-coming nonprofit news leaders have a unique opportunity to help set the course of an industry for generations to come.

Chase facts, not clicks.

Expert, in-depth beat reporting is central to nonprofit newsrooms, and seven-in-ten do investigative and watchdog reporting. Tell under-reported stories, address social problems, amplify all kinds of voices from within these inclusive newsrooms. Your work can change the world.

Build your community as you cover it.

In nonprofit newsrooms, you support a business model based on strengthening communities rather than generating profits. You can connect and learn from your readers, listeners, viewers.

Choose a career where many paths are possible.

Be a journalist. Be an entrepreneur. Be both. Nonprofit newsrooms are reinventing news, and that makes them a great place to invent your own career in the way that fits you.

Keep up with jobs, find nonprofit newsrooms nationwide and sign up for the INN weekly newsletter at inn.org.
